

A Silver Lining

A few months ago, it was all about me,
Yes, me, oh me – wonderful me.
Loving myself, happy as can be.
My life was good, all about me.

Then without warning, out of the blue,
The World's put upon by some killer-like-flu.
Social distancing now is the thing we must do,
Especially we people not so new.

No, no one escapes this scourge of the Earth,
It has slowed down commerce; it's killed net worth.
It's made me question my own self-worth,
And putting me first as I've done since birth.

But, this dark cloud of COVID has a silver lining
To stop the likes of me from incessantly whining.
It's about working together, one-and-all on lining,
While keeping our distance, our talents combining.

Yes, this silver lining is so plain to see,
Benefiting all of us equitably.
It's understanding life's not just about me,
Rather knowing life's better when it's more about we.
